

Bugle Calls

The bugle has been used by military organizations as a form of signaling throughout history. Bugling has been popular in the navy since the era of the cruiser at the turn of the century. Each large ship, such as cruisers and aircraft carriers, would have its own small band so there were always buglers available for passing orders. Ten of the following calls are required to earn the Cadet Bugler Badge. There are many more calls, which are often used in Ships' Routines, particularly at Sea Cadet Training Establishments.

When a full band is not present, the Bugle Call "General Salute" is used in place of the National Anthem when the ensign is raised. For further information, see "Parade Procedures".

Traditionally, the buglers in a band are also drummers, both instruments being ways of communicating orders. These important people have pride of place in the Corps of Drums, with the bugles worn slung on the drummer's hips. Unfortunately, in sea cadets we usually do not have drummers trained in bugling, so this duty falls on the trumpet and cornet players.

Practicing Bugle Calls is an excellent exercise in lip flexibility and tonguing for all brass players. Calls, such as Last Post and Sunset, are an essential part of the ceremonial repertoire of the sea cadet band. Orchestrated arrangements of these two calls appear elsewhere in this book.

The following bugle calls are used in the running of a ship's routine. Bugle calls are used because they can be heard throughout the entire ship and their distinctive melodies can be recognized by the entire ship's company, not just musicians. The use of the call is annotated along with the music. The following calls must be memorized in order to earn the Cadet Bugler Badge: Reveille; Rouse; Sunset; First Post; Last Post; Guard; Alert; General Salute; Still; and Carry On. The best way to learn them is by hearing them, and cadets should be encouraged to learn these calls as well as others for use at the Corps.

REVEILLE: To call the hands in the morning (to awaken the crew).

STILL: To halt all activity, for announcement or orders.

ALERT: Precedes all salutes.

SUNSET: Played when lowering the ensign at sunset.

Complete call not used when under way

GENERAL SALUTE: Played only in the absence of a full band, for the raising of the ensign or the arrival of a reviewing officer on the dais.

CARRY ON: Played after salutes, anthems and Sunset.

FIRST POST: Traditionally, the first posting of sentries for the night.

DEFAULTERS: To call personnel for defaulters parade.

GUARD: To muster the guard.

LAST POST: Traditionally, the last posting of sentries for the night. Today, First Post is sounded at 2040 and Last Post at 2100 except that neither is sounded if sunset occurs after 2040. The Last Post is sounded at funerals and on Remembrance Day, always followed by Rouse.

At sea, used only for burial

ROUSE: May be used to awaken officers. This call always follows Last Post at funerals and on Remembrance Day.

Used for "Guard and Steerage"
Follows "Last Post" at Naval funerals.

OUT PIPES: To end a stand easy. This call is from the days when sailors would smoke pipes during a stand easy. The call "Hands To Classes" should be used when personnel under training are returning to classes, not work.

Used also for "Out pipes"
and "Stop pumps"

GROG: To call the hands to the quarter deck for their daily issue of grog, a mixture of rum and water. Today this call is used for the issue of Ki or cocoa.

Followed by one "G"- "Limejuice?"

COMMODORE'S SALUTE: To salute Commodores.

OFFICER'S DINNER: To call officers to dinner.

HANDS TO CLASSES: Personnel report to their classes for training.

Followed by one or more "G's" to indicate watch required.

Preceded by one or more "G's" to indicate the part of the watch required.

DUTY WATCH: Duty watch to muster.

Followed by one or more "G's" to indicate the watch required.

STAND EASY: Stand easy from work or training (coffee break).

SECURE: To cease work or training at the end of the day.

Followed by one "G"—"Return Arms"

BAND: To muster the band.

SALUTING GUNS' CREWS: To muster the guns' crews.

DUTY HANDS: To call a work party other than the duty watch.

Followed by "G's" to indicate first or second duty hands.

COOKS: To call hands to a meal.

MARKERS: Markers take their positions on the parade.

Followed by one "G"— "Right markers!"
 Followed by two "G's"— "Left markers!"
 Also used for "Recording parties!"

DIVISIONS: Divisions fell in on their markers.

LIBERTY MEN: To muster those personnel proceeding on leave. Short leave is known as liberty, and "liberty men" go ashore in "liberty boats"

DARKEN SHIP: To extinguish lights at bedtime. Also, during the night at sea, to prevent the display of any unauthorized lights outboard.

Followed by "Halt!"— "Undarken Ship!"

CLEAR LOWER DECK: To announce a general muster or evolution requiring all hands.

OFFICERS: To call officers to take posts.

Followed by one "O"- "Officers Warned!"
Followed by two "G's"- "Cable Officers!"
Followed by three "G's"- "Executive Officers!"
Followed by four "G's"- "All Officers!"

ATTENTION: To call the ship's company to attention on the approach of the Commanding or a Reviewing Officer.
